

Tales of Castine 2011

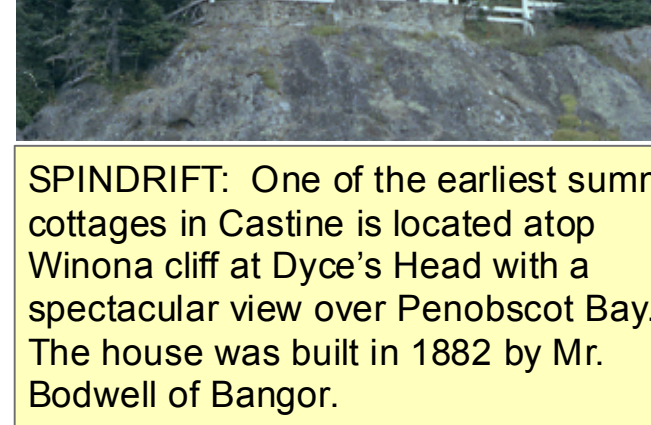

MOSS ACRE: designed by Chicago architects Handy and Cady as a summer cottage, was built in the late 1890's for William Deering Porter. The house, three miles from Castine village, sits on 50 acres with sweeping views of Penobscot Bay and the Camden Hills.

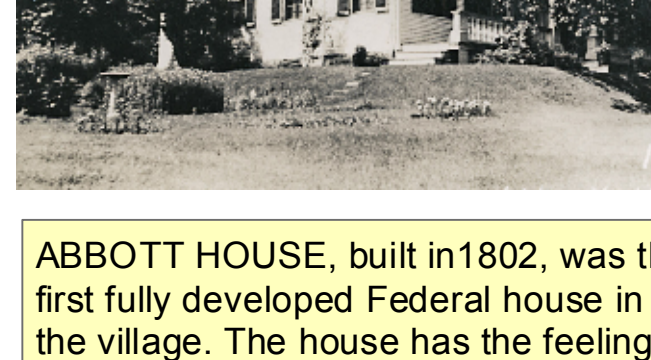

PERKINS / AMES FARM Professor James B. Ames bought the old Stover Perkins farm located in North Castine at the end of Mill Lane in 1899. Ames worked the farm in summers with his two sons, Robert and Richard, and a dozen farmhands.

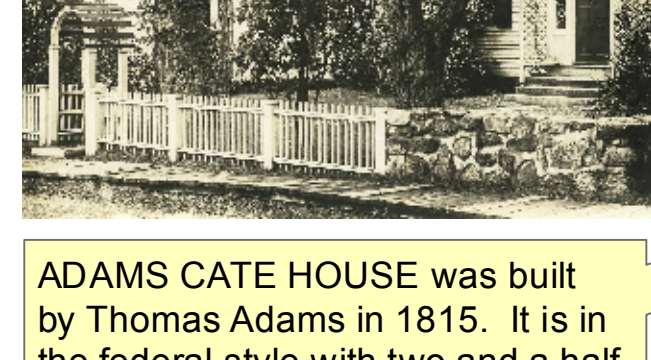

SPINDRIFT: One of the earliest summer cottages in Castine is located atop Winona cliff at Dyce's Head with a spectacular view over Penobscot Bay. The house was built in 1882 by Mr. Bodwell of Bangor.

ABBOTT HOUSE, built in 1802, was the first fully developed Federal house in the village. The house has the feeling of lightness and delicacy characteristic of the Federal style. The house is now the residence of the President of Maine Maritime Academy.

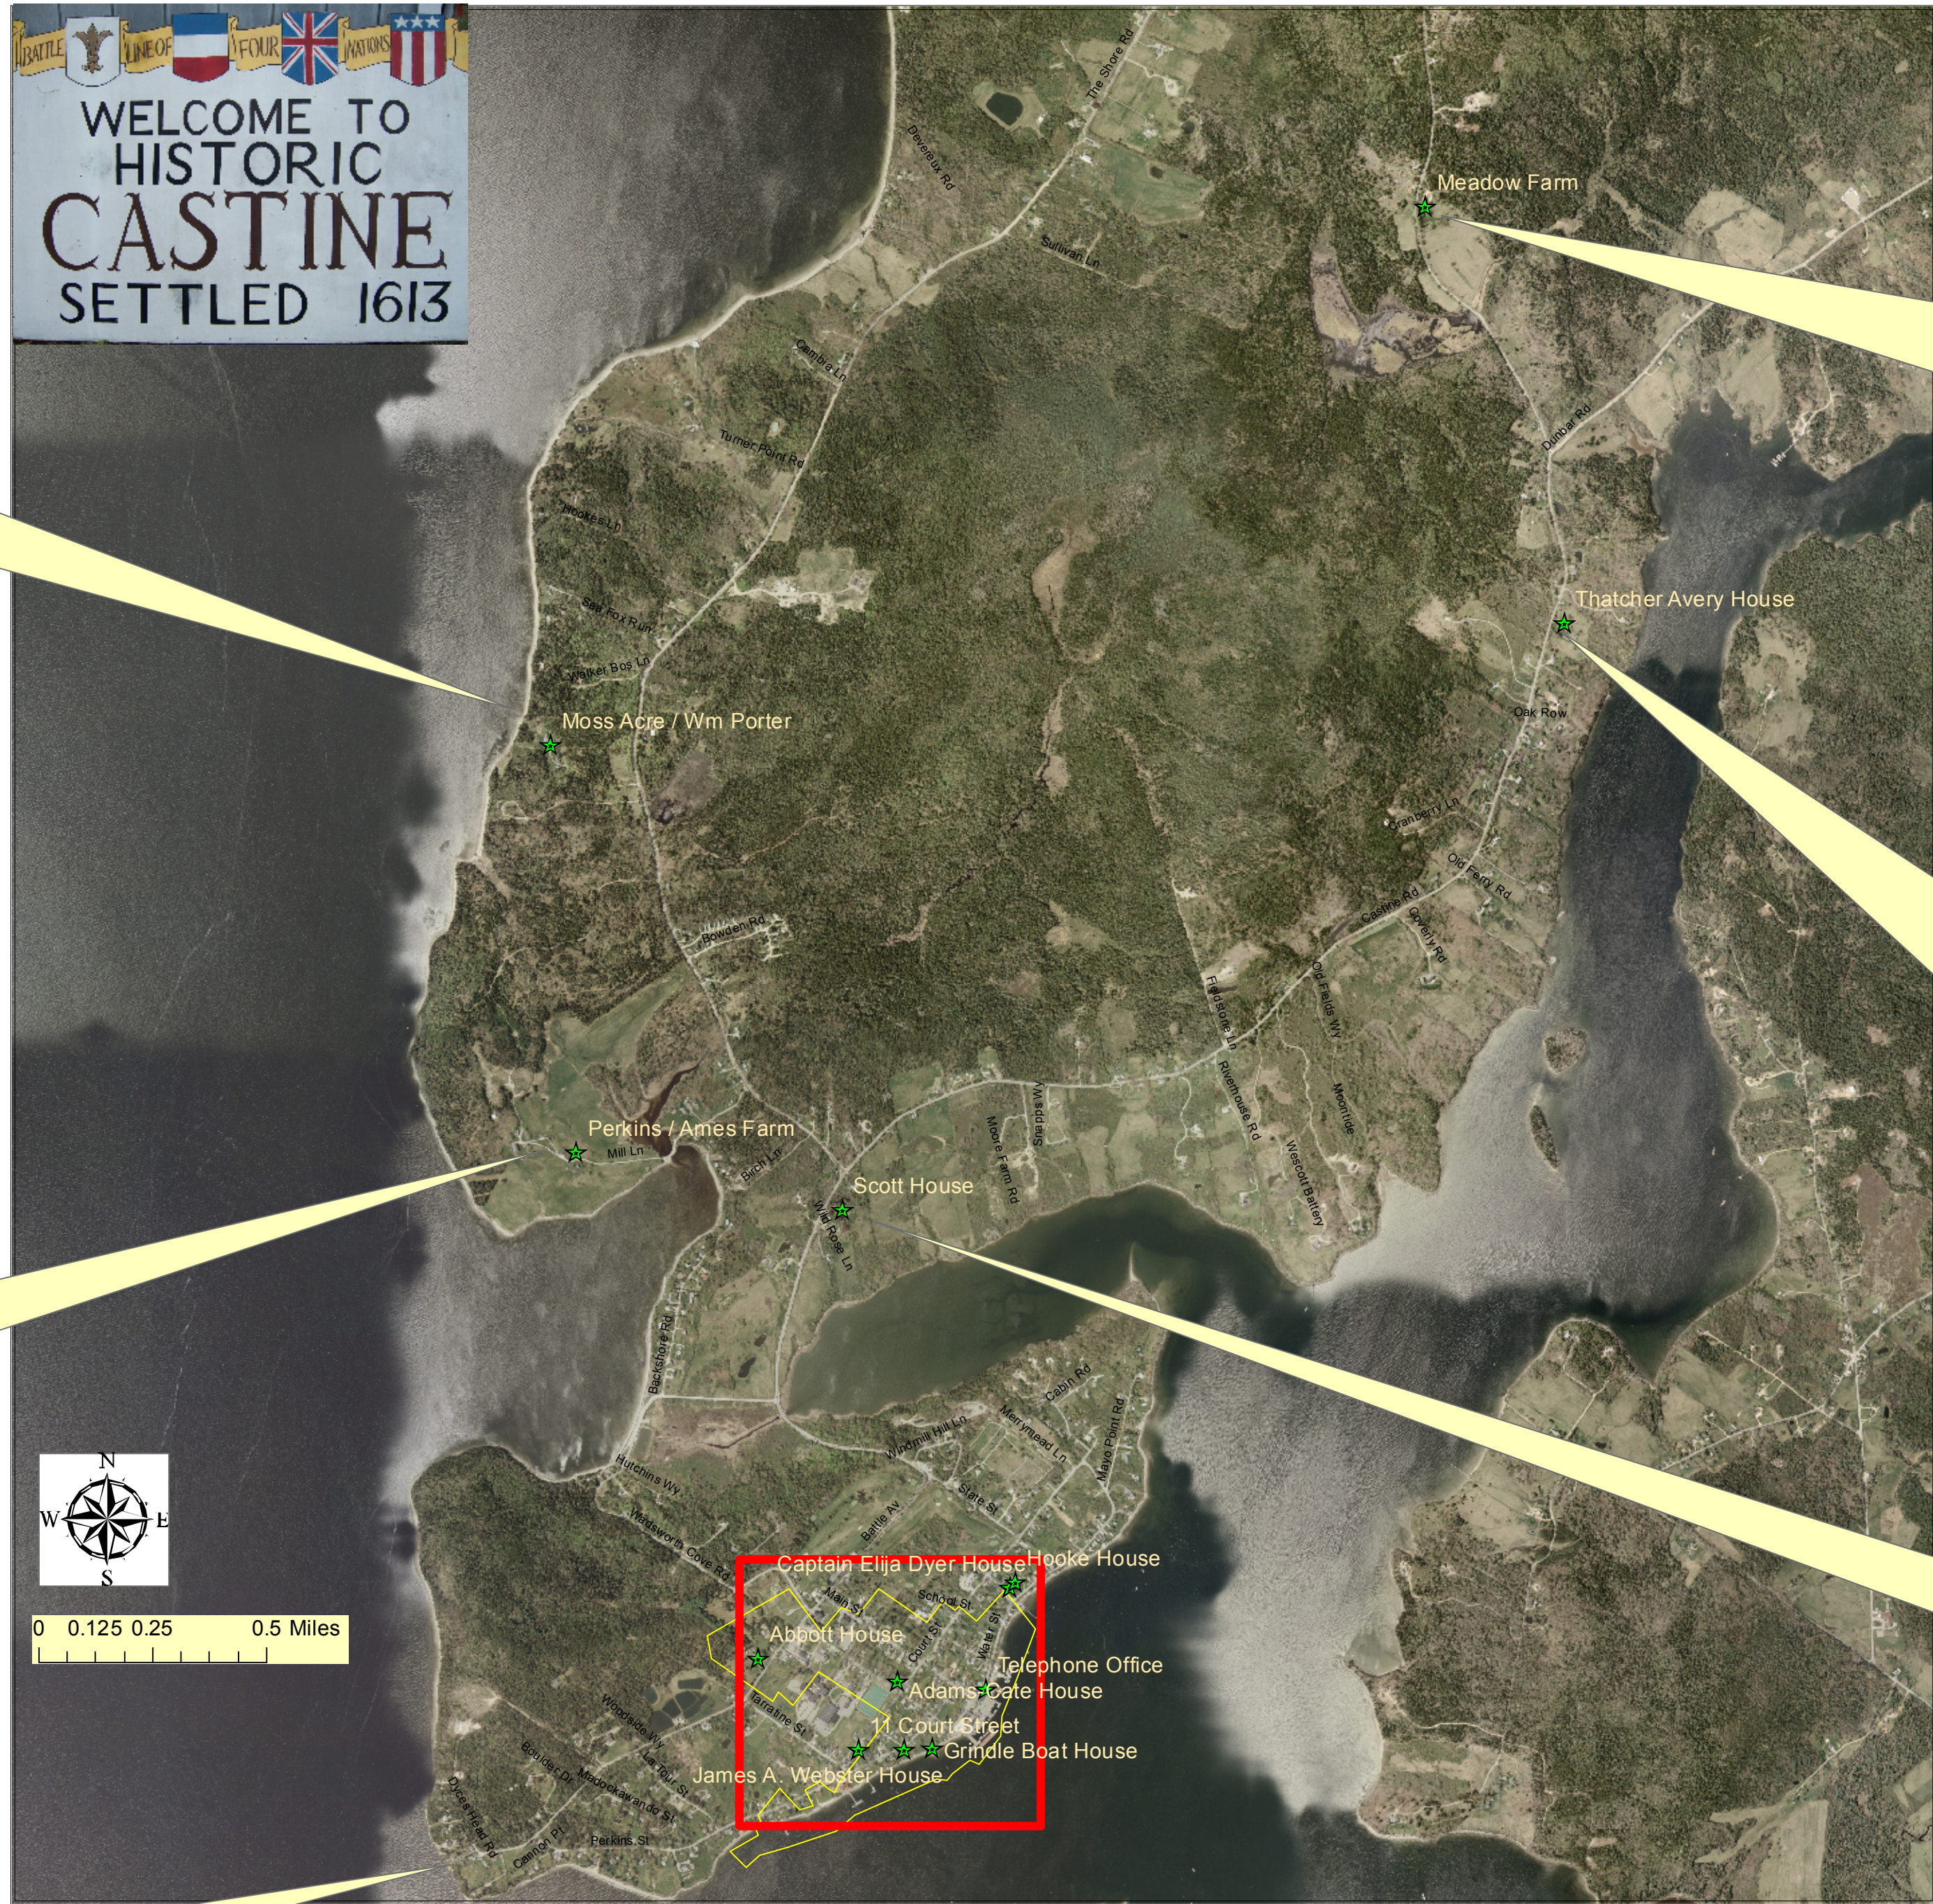

ADAMS CATE HOUSE was built by Thomas Adams in 1815. It is in the federal style with two and a half stories.

11 COURT STREET: The land for the house at 11 Court Street was part of the original Holiday House parcel and carved out of the part that now belongs to Jane Warker at 7 Court Street.

JAMES WEBSTER HOUSE
In 1858 James Webster built his house on Perkins Street and in the back had his boatyard. James learned his shipbuilding craft in the Noyes shipyard and by the 1860's was building schooners.

MEADOW FARM: The house at Meadow Farm was built in 1794, perhaps as a Congregational Church Parsonage. The house is situated perpendicular to Rt 166. At that time the road from Castine to Penobscot ran in front of Meadow Farm.

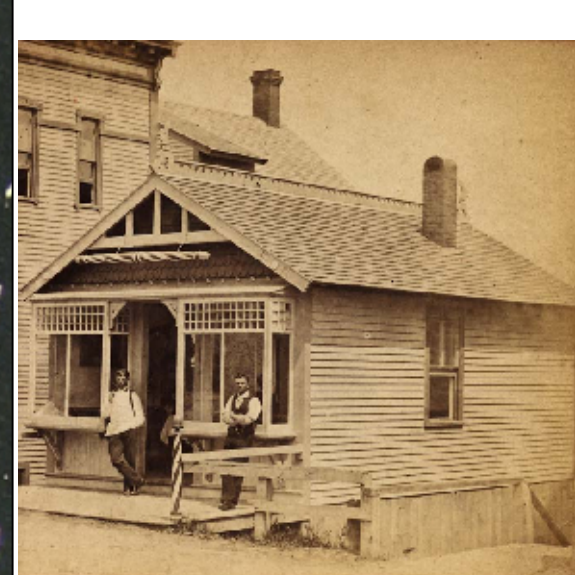

THATCHER AVERY MANOR: John Perkins (5/21/1744 - 4/2/1817) was one of the sixty proprietors granted land in 1762 on the Majabigwade Peninsula by the General Court of Massachusetts. Perkins and his bride moved to North Castine in 1765. Sometime between the grant of land and his marriage, Perkins built a small house on a ridge overlooking the Bagaduce River.

SCOTT HOUSE: The present Fenn House is noted as being owned by James Scott, but built much earlier. One of the oldest houses in Castine, c.1765, this home was originally built as a two family home.

DYER HOUSE and HOOKE HOUSE: In 1795, Thomas Stevens built the house on the right in this image. By 1810, the house belonged to Josiah Hooke and remained in the Hooke family for 75 years. It was torn down in 1949. The Dyer House, on the left, still stands today.

The barbershop on Water Street in Castine in the 1880s, future home of the Telephone Office. This little building later became the Castine Patriot Office and is now a summer home.

THE BOAT HOUSE: In 1891 Dr. J.W. Grindle, a wealthy New Yorker, took over the Stover Hatch house. Subsequently he acquired the shipyard on the adjoining lot and, at much expense, made a handsome lawn of it. He built a stable for his horses in the east corner, a boat house on the shore in which to store his naphtha launch and a stone pier out into the water, leaving open a center view to the harbor.
